Joan Namkoong, born and raised in Hawaii, is the daughter of Korean immigrants. She graduated from Kailua High School and the University of Washington. Following a successful career in journalism, she became a freelance writer and now has several books in print including "Go Home Cook Rice," "Family Traditions in Hawaii," and the new "Food Lover's Guide to Honolulu." Joan is Honolulu's favorite foodie, interested in and expert on all things food related.

Even though I lived here all my life, some of the restaurants listed were never tried by my family. Am going on a food junkie trip to eat Honolulu soon. Thanks for all the suggestions.

Joan Namkoong's slim little volume covers, in concise and precise detail, the myriad food options available both to visitors and locals alike on the island of Oahu. Ranging from reviews of fine dining establishments to shopping tips at City sponsored 'open markets,' anyone with an interest in exploring beyond the well known parameters of Roy's and L&L will surely discover a hidden gem or two that brings to life the remarkably diverse and colorful assortment of food options in Honolulu.

Anyone visiting Honolulu for either the first time or a repeat trip has to take this book with them. The best foods in Hawaii are the local eats. Both home style or Hawaiiin Style cuisine this book will lead you to all the best places. And if you have the luxury of your own kitchen you will also have the best places to buy fish, farmers markets and my favorite Plate lunch and Malassadas. Informative and interesting to read with the bonus of a few choice recipes.
